Men from the Ministry: How Britain Saved Its Heritage By Simon Thurley

Between 1900 and 1950 the British state amassed a huge collection of over 800 historic buildings, monuments, and sites and opened them to the public. This engaging book explains why the extraordinary collecting frenzy took place, locating it in the fragile and nostalgic atmosphere of the interwar years, dominated by neo-romanticism and cultural protectionism. The government's activities were mirrored by the establishment of dozens of voluntary bodies, including the Council for the Protection of Rural England, the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings, and the National Trust. Men from the Ministry sets all this activity, for the first time, in its political, economic and cultural contexts, painting a picture of a country traumatized by war, fearful of losing what was left of its history, and a government that actively set out to protect them. It dissects a government program that established a modern state on deep historical and rural roots.

Editorial Review

Review

"State ownership makes conservation political and Thurley knows his cannot help but be a political book"
Rosemary Hill, Sunday Telegraph.

(Rosemary Hill Sunday Telegraph 2013-06-23)

"The historic built environment demands parity of esteem, Simon argues, and he ends the book by putting the case for tax relief in return for public access to help the owners of historic property to meet their maintenance costs. The two are intimately linked: many recent sales of works of art have been the result of the owners of great houses selling in order to undertake much-needed building repairs." Salon.

(Salon 2013-06-17)

"In this absorbing book, the chief executive of English Heritage explores how, between 1900 and 1950, the British state amassed more than 800 buildings, monuments and historic sites and gave the public access to them. Thurley is a well-placed guide to the characters who enabled this collecting spree and to the challenges that they faced; he tells a vivid story of how the country successfully established a vast open-air museum" – Apollo Magazine, 1st July 2013

(Apollo Magazine 2013-07-01)

"Everyone involved with looking after historic buildings today. . .should read Simon Thurley's. . .well-researched and readable book [...]. Dr Thurley, as the chief executive of English Heritage since 2003 – and a former Director of the Museum of London and Curator of Historic Royal Palaces – is in an exceptional position to tell this tale, which he does at a cracking pace."—Jeremy Musson, Historic House

(Jeremy Musson Historic House 2013-11-01)

"...[This] is a timely book documenting the long and passionate struggle for preserving historic buildings and sites."—R. C. Richardson, THES (R. C. Richardson THES 2014-03-06)

'Thurley's text [is] knowledgeable, subtle, supple, by turns celebratory and sardonic.'—David Lowenthal, TLS (David Lowenthal, TLS 2014-06-20)
